

COLLEGE VISITS

A Visit Is Worth a Thousand Brochures

A college can seem to have everything you and your student are looking for and still not be the right fit. In an era when promotions hit your mailbox every day and your inbox fills with emails describing the latest programs available at the universities on your teen's "list," it can be a difficult task to help your student determine the right path. Although new social media outlets and websites are available to help with the college decision, one way of determining the right college fit has remained a consistent source of excellent information—the campus visit.

What can you gain from a campus visit?

New information sources

On a campus visit, you will often have the opportunity to connect with professors and current students from your teen's area of academic interest. These individuals experience the classroom environment every day and can give you tremendous insight into what your student can expect. You can also meet with representatives from financial aid, housing, and student life who can provide great information about their respective areas. A campus visit can result in information overload, so don't be afraid to ask for contact information and to take notes to reference after your visit. Although your student may be embarrassed by your attention to detail, they'll probably appreciate it later.

The campus atmosphere

Descriptions in glossy brochures and on websites can never fully capture the true campus atmosphere. You can read that a campus is a small oasis in the middle of a large metropolitan

Asbury College

My visit to Asbury College was unforgettable. Upon my arrival, I immediately felt at home. The admissions staff made me feel more like a person and less like a dollar sign or number. I was able to experience first-hand what a typical day as a student was like. Before stepping onto Asbury's campus, I could only view myself as a high school student. However, after visiting, it was easy to see myself attending class, walking to chapel, and living in the residence hall. Without this unique opportunity, I would not have made a decision that would change my life and shape the course of my future.

Taylor University (IN)

The first few minutes of my campus visit to Taylor conveyed to me that it was an exceptional university. Everyone was pleasant and filled with a visible peace of God. As I began meeting the students and professors, I was overwhelmed with the love of Christ they had for me and also for the Indiana community. I had been with my student buddy only an hour when we began helping two older women move boxes of used goods for the needy. My campus visit helped me see that I wanted Taylor pouring into my life for the next four years, and that they truly know what it means to be the hands and feet of Jesus.

Westmont College

I remember driving up to Westmont for the November 2008 Preview Days with a nervous stomach and racing heart. Shortly after arriving, all that subsided. God's presence was overwhelming, even in the midst of the raging Tea Fire. Watching students gather to pray and worship convinced me I wanted to be part of the Westmont community.

I witnessed the students' camaraderie and faith in God firsthand. I learned how available faculty are to students. This was appealing as I did not have that at community college. I was further convinced that what I had heard about Westmont's academic excellence was indeed true. My visit to Westmont preempted my plans to transfer after two years at community college.

I transferred the next semester!

The College at Southeastern

What direction will your life take in service to the kingdom of God? Men and women all over the globe have found that a Southeastern education equipped them for serving Christ as missionaries, pastors, and teachers.

See firsthand what God is doing at The College at Southeastern during Preview Days. Hear from faculty and students, and fellowship with others discerning a call to ministry. Tour the campus, meet with President Daniel Akin and his wife, and find answers to your questions during these one-day events.

You will meet and get to know the faculty at a dinner, and, along with other future students, pose your questions to professors in an informal panel.

area or that it is located on a hilltop in a small college town, but what does that really mean? How does it feel when you walk from building to building? What is the mood of the people you encounter? These are things that can only be fully understood by walking the very sidewalks that your student may walk for the next several years. It is important to understand the feel of a campus and its community before committing to a college.

The student experience

While on campus, don't forget to talk to the students you meet! They are generally the most honest source of information and truly understand what it is like to be a student on that campus. Take time to eat at the dining hall, hang out in the student center, and spend time on campus outside the planned activities of your visit. These will give you an indication of the true student experience.

With all of this to gain, what are you waiting for? It is easy to schedule a campus visit, so add a few to your family calendar today!
